WHEN KIDZ MAKE HISTORY

"My first appointment as a teacher was to P.S. 45 which was located on the east side of our city. I was young, and full of energy and enthusiasm. I wanted to be a good teacher. I taught there for five years. Then I went to a junior high school, which was a promotion for me with a larger salary. The only big trouble with teaching is that you come up against a lot of situations which could be bewildering to you. You never were taught about their existence or how to handle them by the professors in the education courses."

Every Thursday, during the fourth period, we had what you can call "Free Play." On this particular Thursday, the students voted for a game called "Ask and Tell." A student asked a question. Then students volunteered to answer you. You got points if the answer was correct. If not, then you received minus points. I was supposed to give a prize to the winner. On that particular day - never to be forgotten - the principal came in to observe me for my yearly rating mark.

Things proceeded rather normally until Frank arose and asked his question.

"I have at home a picture of General George Washington. I think he and his troops were crossing the Delaware River. I want an answer to something that bothers me very much. Why was he standing up in the boat? Last summer, my father took me fishing. When I tried to stand up in the rowboat, he gave me a terrible scolding. He told me how dangerous it was. Now it must have been dangerous for General Washington to stand up in the boat. Why did he do it?"

"I think I know the answer," said Peter who was waving his hand wildly. "Let me tell you it."

So Peter arose from his seat, went up to the front of the room and faced the class.

"General Washington was a very brave man. He figured the enemy would be on the other side of the river. But where? He wanted a safe place to land the boats with his soldiers. So he stood up in the boat. Thus the enemy could see him. Once they shot at him, then his men would know where the enemy was located."

"That's not the reason," interrupted Marshal. "I come to school by bus. This morning I had a seat. But there was an old man standing up in the aisle. I was tought by my parents to be polite. So I gave that man my seat. There was an old soldier in that boat. He was very tired. So General Washington gave him his seat. The Father of Our Country did what I did. He had to stand until he came to his destination."

"You are both wrong," shouted Ethel. "It is so simple. My grandfather told me the story, and I will tell it to you. We all know that when General George Washington was a boy he chopped down a cherry tree. It was the favorite tree of his father. When he was asked who did it, he was very truthful. He could not tell a lie. He admitted he did it. He must have been very strong as a boy to chop down that tree. For telling the truth, he was rewarded by his father. But for chopping down the tree, he was punished. Just like my father punished my brother George. He was given a terrible spanking by his father. So he was unable to sit down for a very long time. That's why he had to stand up in the boat. He hadn't as yet recovered from his spanking. I know I am correct. Do I get my point for the correct answer?"

"She's all wrong," said Thomas. "You can tell she doesn't know anything about boats. It was winter time. If you stand up in a boat, you can see all around you very clearly. There were large hunks of ice in the water. By standing up, General Washington could give orders to the men who were rowing the boat. Thus they could avoid an accident. Since they got to the other side of the river, it shows how smart he was."

I took a look at the face of my principal. It was what you call "dead pan". I couldn't figure how he had reacted to all of this. I was worried. I needed that job very much. If he didn't give me a satisfactory rating - "S" - I would be in trouble. The period bell rang. Our next assignment was spelling. He couldn't stay for that. He left by the back door of the room. I could actually hear my heart beating.

It was three days later that I found an envelope in my letter box in the main office. It contained my rating sheet. In part, this is what he said: "Rating - "S". I enjoyed the period very much. But on reflection, I have concluded that it is children who make and remake the history of our country."
